3. Background information

Established in 1951, the International Organization for Migration (IOM) is a Related Organization of the United Nations (UN). As the leading UN agency in the field of migration, IOM works closely with governmental, intergovernmental, and non-governmental partners. It is dedicated to promoting humane and orderly migration for the benefit of all.

In 1990, IOM established its presence and conducted its first operation in Jordan, after which Jordan joined IOM as a member state in 1999. Today, after more than three decades of official presence in the country, the organization works with a broad range of stakeholders and the Jordanian Government to provide assistance, protection and other services to migrants, refugees and vulnerable host communities in need, and advocating for their rights, while supporting the Government of Jordan to improve migration and border management. IOM implements a diverse portfolio of programming in Jordan, including projects related to labour mobility and social inclusion, public health, refugee assistance, resettlement operations, family reunification, access to justice, and climate change and resilience.

As part of the regional response to the Syria Crisis and the “One refugee approach”, IOM Jordan has been assisting refugees in country through wide ranging interventions, including direct humanitarian assistance inside camps and in urban settings, climate adaptation, health care, voluntary repatriation protection and livelihoods assistance for interim/durable solutions. With the change in regime in Syria in December 2024 and amidst an existing decline in funding for the refugee response, there has been an increased pressure on agencies providing services to refugees and host communities to innovate on programming and partnerships.

With this context in mind, under the direct supervision of the Head of Programmes and in close coordination with the Project Development Officer and pertinent operational colleagues, the UN Fellow will support with the planning, resource mobilization, day-to-day implementation, monitoring and evaluation of programmes that support refugees and host communities in Jordan.

4. Duties, responsibilities and output expectations:

Within the framework of the Fellowships Programme for Technical Cooperation Capacity Building and Human Resources Development, the candidate will perform the following duties:

- Provide support in refugee-assistance related activity implementation, such as direct in-kind assistance and cash-based interventions to meet basic needs, livelihoods, public health, capacity building for government and non-government actors (civil society and private sector) for basic needs, protection, gender equality, and other projects.
- Support monitoring and evaluation efforts for on-going projects, including site visits and engagement with project beneficiaries, where appropriate.
- Coordinate the planning and organization of workshops, focus groups discussions, community dialogues, and other community-based participatory methods for gathering data and information from migrant, refugee, and host communities.
- Assist with the conceptualization, drafting and editing of concept notes and project proposals in coordination with relevant units and stakeholders, with a focus on expanding programming with new donors and in new or dormant areas of programming, including on the climate-refugee nexus, livelihoods assistance and joint programming with the IOM mission in Syria related to voluntary repatriation.
- Draft donor profiles and guidance notes on donor priorities. Assist in developing approaches to expand the IOM donor base, including research and mapping of funding trends.
- Clean, compile and analyse primary data and prepare reports or presentations for dissemination of findings for the purpose of strengthened monitoring, evaluation and learning within the organization as well as within the broader humanitarian/development community.
- Draft high-quality programmatic updates or donor reports, presentations, fact sheets or other communications materials. Conduct research on the situation of and assistance to refugees in Jordan, related policy and contextual updates dynamics, as well as other jointly identified areas of interest to the assigned Fellow and IOM.
- Support liaison efforts with donors, UN partners, and governmental and non-governmental stakeholders in Jordan, including on the development and publication of joint communications materials.
